Guten Tag!

There are exciting times ahead at Crankpot Industries! Not only is our educational website going from strength to strength but I am excited to announce that we are busily planning our first ever Crankpot Industries Science Fair!

This will be a chance for you to visit Crankpot Industries to hear and see first hand all the wunderbar work that goes on behind our doors! My scientists have already started to prepare intriguing, stimulating and interactive science presentations based on the work they have been doing in their LABs.

However, that is not where our Science Fair will end! I know there are many areas of research that interest my scientists that they have not been finding out about while at work. Therefore I am opening up the Science Fair to contributions from individual scientists! Scientists can choose any area of science they find of interest and create a Science Fair display at home which will be included on the day.

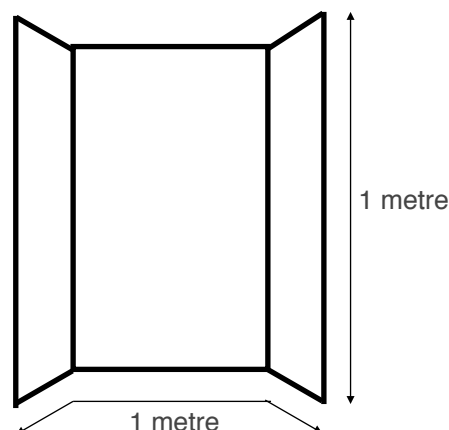

I hope that many of my scientists will take this opportunity and, with help from their families, create some wunderbar, interesting and professional displays!

Displays should be free standing (a backing board made from a strong cardboard box is a good start!) and measure 1m x 1m (see diagram below), there will be some space in front of your display for any items you wish to include! What you put on your display is up to you but it is a good idea to start with a science question you are trying to answer! There are many websites about science fairs online which may help.

If you and your scientist plan on entering the Science Fair please complete the attached form and return by Thursday December the 4th. The completed display should be brought to Crankpot industries on Thursday December the 12th ready for the Science Fair the following day.
